A Year to Remember

Congratulations to Rotman MBA students on the completion of another successful academic year. In the past year, your energy, enthusiasm and hard work have made the Rotman name stand out on the U of T campus, across Canada, and throughout the business community.

This memorable year was kicked off in style in September when a team of Rotman second-year students (David Jarvis, John Corinthios, and Luke O'Brien) won The Economist Business Challenge, beating out teams from Harvard, Wharton and Kellogg. In November, the Rotman Women in Management Association held two events to encourage more women to enroll in the MBA program - an open-house and the inaugural SheBiz event, which brought high school students to Rotman to get them thinking about the value of an MBA. January's annual MBA Business Conference, "Urban Regeneration: Pursuing National Prosperity", saw an impressive array of business and political leaders gather at the School to explore the vital importance of cities to national economies. And in February, everyone enjoyed the Global Business Association's international fair, featuring food and music from around the world.

The School enjoyed its most successful year yet in the international rankings. Last September, The Wall Street Journal named Rotman to the top 50 worldwide and called us a 'hidden gem' - a school that produces excellent graduates, but doesn't receive the recognition it deserves. We were also named the 7th favorite school in the world for finance recruiters. Then in October, BusinessWeek ranked Rotman in the top five schools in the world outside of the U.S. To cap it all off, in January, Rotman was ranked 21st in the world by the Financial Times, up an impressive 10 spots from last year. The FT ranking is the most important and comprehensive global rating of business schools. Rotman's percentile ranking has jumped 51 points since the survey's inception in 1999, giving us "the best trajectory in the MBA universe" - which we proudly announced to the world in ads in The Globe and Mail and The Wall Street Journal.

Those of you graduating this year are joining a worldwide network of more than 16,000 U of T business alumni in more than 70 countries worldwide. I encourage you to take advantage of the benefits available to Rotman alumni - our ongoing roster of events; our annual life-long learning day, held in June; and our expanding suite of executive education courses. I urge you to keep in touch with your peers and with us - and this has never been easier thanks to the Rotman Alumni Portal. Be sure to bookmark <http://portal.rotman.utoronto.ca>, and visit it often.

This is a great time to graduate. While the job market poses some challenges, I urge you to take a long-term view: at no time in recent memory has the supply of talented, educated people been in decline, until 1999. You have an unprecedented chance to find your place and rise to make a difference in the business world of the future.

The Rotman School introduced you to integrative thinking, and it has become a key part of your unique educational experience. One thing that I've observed among the integrative thinkers in our Rotman Integrative Thinking Seminar Series - people like Frank Stronach, Dominic D'Allessandro, Michael Spence and Isadore Sharp - is their unwillingness to accept tradeoffs. Integrative thinkers refuse to accept obstacles in their way, viewing them instead as tensions that require creative management. They have a keen view of 'how things should be', and they set out to make it happen. They can literally change the world with their thinking. And so can you.

I leave you with this challenge: take the skills and tools you've gained here, and in a market where you'll be more influential than ever before, don't accept the easy tradeoffs. Find a way to change the world, in your own way.

For those returning for another year of study, I look forward to watching you add to the excitement and momentum at the School and contributing to our global growth.

On behalf of Rotman faculty and staff, my very best wishes to each of you.

Dean Roger Martin

Sometimes we don't realize what we have.

We all expect to lose things; that's just the way it is. We might even imagine that we have a good idea of what we're going to lose. Maybe we do. So we keep an eye on those things we think are at risk, a laundry list of worries that we carry around. In a strange way, we may just be preparing ourselves for the day they won't be here anymore.

But things don't always work out the way we expect.

Suddenly, something disappears. It's gone before we even had a chance to worry about losing it. It can make you feel as if all the years you've spent checking for traffic before crossing the street, you've been looking the wrong way.

Only once it's gone do you truly begin to realize what it was.

Maybe the best thing to do is to find out what's missing, and somehow try and put some of it back.

So here's what I suggest.

Always take a position.
Believe in what you say.
Act with fierce loyalty.
Let everyone see the same face.
Become someone that people feel proud to call their friend.

And always keep this one goal in mind:

Turn down the suck and turn up the rule.

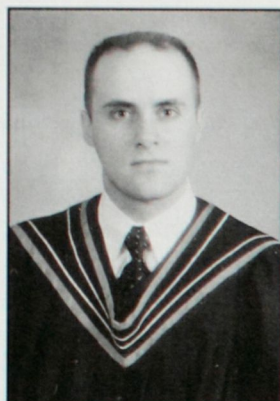

Go Sens.

A Letter from the Editors

Dear classmates,

Congratulations on a successful year at Rotman! This past year we have been through it all - from getting over the nerves of orientation, to staying up all night to get that case write-up done, to partying hard at the formal. Hopefully, you will be able to look back at this year with fond memories of the good times you've had with your friends... and we hope this yearbook captures all of those memories.

We worked long and hard to put this yearbook together, but it couldn't have been done without the many people who volunteered as photographers, sent in their own personal photos, and helped out with the layout. Thank you all for your time and effort.

Remember, never take this time we have together for granted. We hope you enjoy the yearbook!

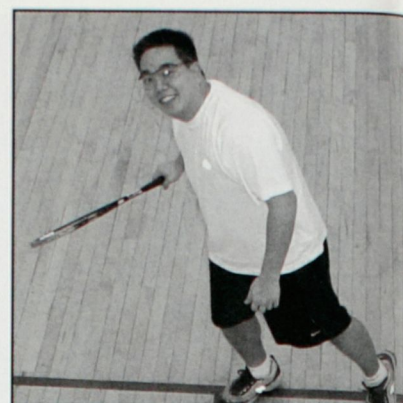

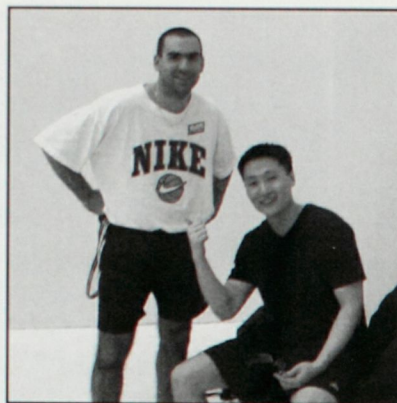

Sincerely,

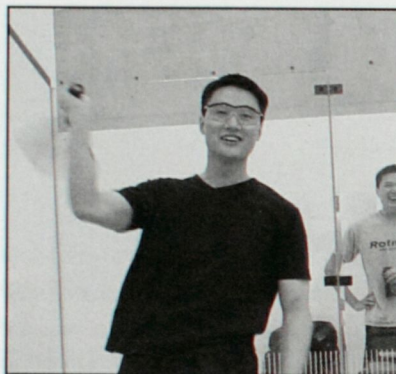

Andrea, Carolina, & Ozzie
